Minds? Kristin Andrews, 2012-07-20 An argument that as folk psychologists humans and perhaps other animals don't so much read minds as see one another as persons with traits emotions and social relations By adulthood most of us have become experts in human behavior able to make sense of the myriad behaviors we find in environments ranging from the family home to the local mall and beyond In philosophy of mind our understanding of others has been largely explained in terms of knowing others beliefs and desires describing others behavior in these terms is the core of what is known as folk psychology In Do Apes Read Minds Kristin Andrews challenges this view of folk psychology arguing that we don't consider others beliefs and desires when predicting most quotidian behavior and that our explanations in these terms are often inaccurate or unhelpful Rather than mindreading or understanding others as receptacles for propositional attitudes Andrews claims that folk psychologists see others first as whole persons with traits emotions and social relations Drawing on research in developmental psychology social psychology and animal cognition Andrews argues for a pluralistic folk psychology that employs different kinds of practices including prediction explanation and justification and different kinds of cognitive tools including personality trait attribution stereotype activation inductive reasoning about past behavior and generalization from self that are involved in our folk psychological practices According to this understanding of folk psychology which does not require the sophisticated cognitive machinery of second order metacognition associated with having a theory of mind animals including the other great apes may be folk psychologists too
