

Globalization and Nigeria's quest for self-Reliance and Political sovereignty: Changing the Narratives.

Sadiqque A. Abba, Sulaiman Badheer , Bukhari M. Bello

Department of Political Science and International Relations, University Of Abuja, Abuja-Nigeria

ABSTRACT: The devastating consequences of the slave trade of the 17th century have left an indelible mark on the history of most Africa, Asia and Latin America. This trade was necessitated by the quest for raw materials, cheap labour and market for Europe industrial goods. Moreover, colonialism further entrenched these phenomenon of aggressive exploitation of both human and material resource from colonies with a view of developing their colonial economies/imperialist while the same phenomenon keep the colonies in perpetual dependence and mainly producers of raw materials. Expectations were high after Nigeria's independence but unfortunately, the crisis of leadership that inherited the colonial infrastructures and policies suddenly began to tow the same path which the colonizers have taken. This paper seeks to X-ray globalization and Nigeria quest for self-reliance by highlighting the need for a change of narrative because Nigeria cannot continue to blame her inescapable colonial masters for her predicament as there were former colonies that have overcome their developmental challenges. The paper also concludes with some recommendations among which are: the need for present Nigeria leadership to take responsibilities of development by looking inward to harnessing and utilizing national potentials and prioritizing key sectors of the economy for development. Also government must as matter of urgency renew its commitments toward fighting corruption, insecurity, disaster and stagnation by strengthening democratic structures and ensuring transparency and probity in governance.

Key words: Globalization, Nigeria, Self-Reliance, Politics, Sovereignty, Narratives

I. INTRODUCTION

Industrialization required raw materials and market space to flourish. Therefore the quest to source for these raw materials and market space led to the scramble and partitioning of territories by the emerging industrialized countries in Europe and United States of America in third world countries of Africa, Asia and Latin America. This created a pattern of increasing globalism. As globalism produced a world economy in the 18th, 19th and 20th centuries, local economies around the world began to change the pattern of specialization, ideas sharing and technological acquisition.

Increased trading, improvement in information and communication technology, exchange, transportation, strong banking system and tourism have led to ever increasing network of interdependency among countries of the world. When Britain looked to other countries to satisfy their demand for coal, those countries began to rely on the revenues they could gain by exporting coal. These countries, in turn use these revenues to buy British goods or import raw materials that they would for their own industrialization. This creates a situation of interdependency among nation states. The contemporary reality is that, there is no state that is in a position of autarky, because of the interconnectedness and interdependency of global economy. As countries trade with one another more regularly and more extensively they stopped producing things they could import cheaply and concentrated on producing goods and services they have comparative advantage. However, with the passage of time, these individual countries lost their abilities to produce certain goods completely, thereby relying on other countries exclusively to meet their demands.

As trade between far-flung parts of the world produced a global integrated economy, so also ideas, innovations, technology, culture and political philosophy were exported as easily as raw materials. Globalization is an emerging reality. According to Adenoma O. (1998:167) who conceptualized globalization to refer to the increased integration, across countries, of markets for goods, services and capital. It implies in turn accelerated expansion of economic activities globally and sharp increases in the movement of tangible and intangible goods across national and regional boundaries. With that movement, individual countries are becoming more closely integrated into the global economy. Their trade linkages and investments flow grow more complex, and cross border financial movements are more volatile. More importantly, globalization has been created, and continues to be maintained by liberation of economic-policies in several key areas. It is clear today, that, people and nation states can no longer think only in terms of individual state and action, but, a component of global order.
