

and Speciation in Paleozoic Bryozoans. Ausley and Paeffgen is a careful consideration of Paleozoic bryozoan diversity from several morphological points of view, but unfortunately neglects biogeographic and community ecological dimensions of the problem. Paper 9 (Coordinated Stasis and Evolutionary Ecology of Silurian to Middle Devonian Phrynos in the Appalachian Basin, Beier and Baird) is unique in this volume, because it stays close to the facts of biostratigraphy and their interpretation. Several examples of species level anagenesis within community groups are alluded to (for example Fig. 9.1, the Levinsella and Stricklandella lineages; Fig. 9.2, the Elavotheca-Amphigenia lineage). For the Erycinella and Stricklandella lineages most of the evidence is developed outside of the area considered by the authors. The many other lineages cited in the two figures cannot be documented within the Central Appalachian area, because of limited biostratigraphic continuity in the fauna. Paper 10 (Phylogeny in Trends and Speciation: Analyzing Macroevolutionary Processes and Levels of Selection, Lieberman) is another exercise in logic that shows little understanding of the real world of biofacies (evolving community groups) through time or the fact that community groups are arranged in a sequence of evolutionary units and subunits through the Phanerozoic.

Organismal coverage is small. Three papers emphasize bryozoans, in accord with interests of one of the Editors. Examples are restricted to marine invertebrates.

Only one paper (No. 9) considers the community ecological context from which samples were obtained. None of the authors considered that speciation occurs within a community ecological context, i.e., species do not randomly bounce around during evolutionary time from one environment to another (Beier and Baird come closest to avoiding this pitfall). Since the primary constraint on thinking about speciation modes must accord with the biofacies continuity trend community group within ecological-evolutionary units and subunits of the fossil record, failure to consider this information deprives much of the elegant logic displayed in most of the papers of its potential value. All papers, except No. 8, suffer from treating the evolution of individual taxa in a manner that separates them from the other organisms with which they are closely associated in evolutionary time. Logic, no matter how brilliant, must accord with the patterns observed in nature.

The volume is well printed, with few printers' errors, priced moderately for these days, and a fair indication of current thinking in Paleobiological circles about some aspects of speciation. I doubt that it will have much long-term impact on the field, but strongly recommend several chapters for reading.

Modern Pollen Rain, Vegetation and Climate in Lowland East Java, Indonesia, by K.R.M. Beuning, Balkema, Rotterdam, Harlower, 1996. vii + 48 pp., 48 plates, Price £11.10/20, ISBN 90-5410-629-8.

This thin volume, number 14 in the series Modern Quaternary Research in Southeast Asia, focuses on the examination of modern pollen spectra from 10 low altitude lakes and reservoirs positioned along a rainfall gradient covering the eastern, most climatically seasonal, half of Java. The study is clearly aimed at putting Southeast Asian palynology on a firm scientific footing by cautious and systematic sample selection, thorough sedimentological analysis of each sediment sample matrix, and comprehensive documentation of the pollen. The pollen samples are interpreted in relation to the nature of each site, some qualitative assessment of surrounding catchment vegetation and the regional rainfall gradient. In common with previous studies in the lowland tropics which are naturally rainforested and where little ecological research has been conducted, the majority of taxa, though not the majority of pollen, are unidentified. In an attempt to overcome this problem for vegetation and climate reconstruction, the interesting approach of dividing the pollen into site specific groups and groups related to different parts of the rainfall gradient is adopted.

The results are somewhat equivocal. It is demonstrated that the pollen generally reflects the vegeta-

The Djief Hunters, 26,000 Years of Rainforest Exploitation on the Bird's Head of Papua, Indonesia Juliette M. Pasveer, 2004-07-01 Two prehistoric cave sites on the Bird's Head of western New Guinea provide a detailed narrative of 26 000 years of human occupation of this area During Late Pleistocene times lower temperatures allowed a suite of montane animal species to descend onto the lowland Ayamaru Plateau When the montane fauna receded during the subsequent climatic amelioration people switched their hunting focus to a forest wallaby known locally as Djief Detailed analysis of this species remains including the reconstruction of their age profile provides insights into why prolonged hunting of this species did not lead to its extinction The wallaby population evidently thrived at its demographic maximum throughout the early and mid Holocene suggesting that human population densities and therefore hunting pressure were low until c 5000 BP This volume of Modern Quaternary Research in Southeast Asia offers a unique perspective on sustainable hunting in prehistory and provides intriguing insights into hunter gatherer subsistence tool manufacturing and use the changing intensity of occupation of the sites and environmental exploitation from Late Pleistocene times onwards in a lowland tropical region It forms an important contribution to the current debate on the possibilities of human occupation of tropical rainforest before the advent of agriculture
