Human Services Program Evaluation Thomas Barrett, James Sorensen, 2015 The term outcome evaluation has become one of the most popular terms among human service providers and those whose job it is to evaluate the impact of human service programs In the public sector alone there are over a hundred instruments in use to evaluate the impact of state human service programs Most states many providers and most accrediting bodies have taken on the challenge of developing better program evaluation because there is universal agreement that better evaluation systems are needed This multiplicity of approaches may have been appropriate for the early stages of development but eventually some standardization is necessary This program evaluation discusses the following topics as a means to inform and guide sound policy and practice decision making 9781138103962 Program Evaluation Robert L. Schalock, C.V.D. Thornton, 1988-07-31 This book is written to help human service program administrators either interpret or conduct program evaluations. Our intended audience includes administrators and those students being trained for careers in human services administration. Our focus is on persons interested in assessing programs in which people work with people to improve their condition. The book's title, Program Evaluation: A Field Guide for Administrators, describes how we hope you use this book as a tool. In writing the book, we have attempted to meet the needs of persons who have to conduct program evaluations as well as those who must use those evaluations. Hence, we have attempted to make the book user friendly. You will find, for example, numerous guidelines, cautions, and specific suggestions. Use the book actively. Our primary motive is to help administrators make better decisions. In fact, the primary reason for program evaluation is to help program administrators make good decisions. These decisions often must balance the goals of equity or fairness in the distribution of goods and services among people in the economy, efficiency, obtaining the most output for the least resources, and political feasibility. Take, for example, the administrator who must decide between a new program favored by some of the program's constituents and maintaining the status quo, which is favored by other constituents.

Evaluation Models D.L. Stufflebeam, George F. Madaus, T. Kellaghan, 2000-11-30 Organized in three sections, the first includes a historical perspective on the growth of evaluation theory and practice; the second section includes articles on the major schools of thought about evaluation; the final section describes and discusses the standards for program evaluation.

Effective Grant Writing and Program Evaluation for Human Service Professionals Francis K. O. Yuen, Kenneth L. Terao, Anna Marie Schmidt, 2013-07-29 A state-of-the-art guide for developing grants with a strong emphasis on using program outcome measurement to underscore need and accountability. Based on the authors' many years of experience in the public and nonprofit sectors, Effective Grant Writing and Program Evaluation for Human Service Professionals integrates the topics of grant proposal writing and program evaluation, offering grant seekers the practical guidance they need to develop quality proposals, obtain funding, and demonstrate service results and accountability. The authors clearly and succinctly illustrate and describe each stage of the grant writing and evaluation process. Problems or issues that arise frequently are highlighted and followed by specific advice. In addition, numerous real-world examples and exercises are included throughout the book to give readers the opportunity for reflection and practice. This timely reference incorporates a strengths perspective, providing an inside look at the grant writing and evaluation processes with insights from experienced grant writers, agency administrators, foundation program managers, and grant reviewers. Specific examples of successful grant proposals and evaluation plans and instruments serve as models for learning and practice. Field-tested individual and group exercises facilitate the development of grant writing and evaluation skills. Discussion of electronic technology in grant writing and evaluation, including writing and submitting grant proposals online and identifying funding sources. This grant writing and program evaluation guide follows a needs-driven, evidence-based, result-oriented, and client-centered perspective Its authoritative discussion equips human service professionals to effectively develop grants with a strong emphasis on measuring program outcomes
