Political Participation and Non-democratic Political Culture in Western Europe, East-Central Europe and Post-Yugoslav Countries

Andrej Kirbiš

1 Introduction

Understanding patterns of political participation in Post-Communist and especially post-Yugoslav countries is crucial for their integration in the European Union. Post-Yugoslav countries, for instance, have in the past been affected by a turbulent dissolution of the joint state with ethnic strife and armed conflicts taking place. Many areas of political culture and value orientations of post-communist citizens have previously been studied (for instance, traditionalism, authoritarianism, nationalism and related non-democratic political-cultural orientations; see, for example, Flere and Molnar 1992; Galić 2000; Frieze et al. 2003; Sekulić and Šporer 2006; Klingemann et al. 2006; Brajdić-Vuković et al. 2007; Klanjšek 2007; Lavrič 2007; Simkus 2007; Flere and Kirbiš 2009a, b; Kirbiš 2011; Kirbiš and Flere 2011b), while relatively few studies have dealt with patterns of political participation. This especially holds true for post-Yugoslav countries, since only a small number of systematic cross-national studies have analyzed and compared political participation of all post-Yugoslav countries (see, for example, Kirbiš 2011; Kirbiš and Flere 2011a).<sup>1</sup> Even though levels of political participation and political culture are important in the process of consolidating the new democracies, one aspect is especially understudied in Post-Communist states: the association between political participation and political culture.

The aim of the present chapter is to analyze the levels of political participation, non-democratic political culture and the link between political participation and political culture in three European regions. I have examined post-Yugoslav states within the wider European context. This chapter is divided into five sections.
