

Sustaining Religious Education Leadership: Implications for Policy Reform

Michael Buchanan

Australian Catholic University, Melbourne, Australia

Abstract

Religious education leaders promote the religious identity of the school as well as foster a sense of connectedness through building school community. However, these leaders who play a key role in this area are at times the ones who feel the least connected to the school community and are more likely than other leaders to resign from the position prior to completing their full term. One of the things principals of schools fear the most is the resignation of the religious education leader in their school (Crotty 2005). The high turnover rate of these leaders and the dearth of applicants to fulfil this role have resulted in less experienced personnel being appointed to these positions. Religious education leaders themselves as well as principals are concerned with the lack of suitable successors willing to take on the role. They want successors who are experienced and capable of senior leadership. Over the past decade the religious education leadership policy reforms and initiatives from diocesan based centralised authorities for Catholic education across Australia have attempted to address these concerns. Drawing on the insights from a study into the kinds of support religious education leaders need to do their job effectively, this chapter explores the general limitations of these policies and proposes some recommendations for policy reform that will sustain Religious Education Leadership as a viable career pathway.

Keywords: policy reform, religious education, educational leadership

Introduction

The relatively new position of religious education leader began to emerge in Catholic schools across many dioceses throughout Australia, during the immediate decades following the Second Vatican Council (1962–1965) (Crotty, 1998; see also Buchanan, 2005). Since the time of its conception there has been a lack of clarity about what the role entails, which has served to generate feelings of isolation and disconnectedness amongst many religious education leaders (Fleming, 2002; Stern & Buchanan, 2021). This has been evidenced by a history of rapid religious education leadership turnover (Blahut & Bezzina, 1998; Engebretson, 2006). In fact, for some Catholic schooling systems the average employment span of a religious education leader has been approximately two years (Engebretson, 1998; Rymarz, 1998). The swift turnover of these leaders hinders a school's ability to promote and deliver consistently high-quality religious education (Crotty,

Narrowing the Achievement Gap Susan J. Paik, Herbert J. Walberg, 2007-06-04 The subject of minority children's learning has long been the concern of civic leaders parents scholars and educators The federal legislation No Child Left Behind emphasizes the concern even more It specifically requires assessing the academic achievement of minority students particularly in economically disadvantaged areas and holding schools accountable for their progress Schools that fail to attain Adequate Yearly Progress face the real possibility of being forced to close if they continually fail to perform Unlike the past these are increasingly high stakes consequences for educators parents students and the schools that serve them This book is timely and relevant because it addresses these issues and recommends solutions for Latino Black and Asian students This book also has implications for the problems the nation faces in helping all students to learn well particularly those that lag in academic achievement In considering the broad problems and in recommending solutions the book provides breadth concision and unique organization As the introductory chapter makes clear the book simultaneously considers not only the three most visible minority groups in the U S but draws upon the perspectives of anthropology education ethnic studies psychology and sociology From these several perspectives this book is organized within three broad sections 1 culturally diverse families and schooling 2 issues of immigration and schooling experiences and 3 socio cultural perspectives on teaching learning and development Within each section the authors marshal research literature regarding each ethnic minority group
