Success and Failure of Microbusiness Owners in Africa Michael Frese, 2000-02-28 Only if they do the right thing at the right time will owners of small businesses succeed Simple enough but what are the factors in their psychological makeup that enable them to do it Frese and his contributors have studied small businesses in four African countries from a psychological perspective the first time this has been done and report that it is the psychological aspects of their strategies not just the strategies themselves that contribute significantly to their success They also prove that many of the stereotypes that seem to characterize the owners of microbusinesses are clearly incorrect Executives analysts bankers international entrepreneurs and their academic colleagues will discover that many of the conclusions they have drawn from previous studies can not be generalized Only by separating those that can be generalized from those that can not can we get a true understanding of the small business entrepreneurial dynamic Frese and his colleagues focus on South Africa Zimbabwe Uganda and Zambia to produce a clear overview of the research on microbusiness and entrepreneurship in developing countries They find that psychological strategies are closely related to entrepreneurial success but because conditions in these countries differ widely the particulars of certain strategies and their effectiveness may also differ They show that a number of ideas prevalent among professionals and entrepreneurship researchers in developing countries need to be challenged Among them that microenterprise owners who started their companies because they were unemployed do worse than those who started for other more positive reasons Also that human capital education represents the most important set of variables to be considered for success it isn't or that employing family members decreases success it doesn't Well written and impeccably researched the book is an essential contribution to corporate and academic libraries as well as to the knowledge of individuals in business psychology entrepreneurial and regional studies and related fields

Gower Handbook of Marketing Michael J. Thomas, 1995 This edition has been revised to include new chapters on subjects as diverse as relationship marketing and international marketing research The 36 contributors are all acknowledged leaders in their chosen field with practical experience of marketing
