

ADMINISTRATIVE MODEL OF CURRICULUM

1

It is called Top down approach. Curriculum development goes from high authority to people at grass root level.

Major decision are not taken by teachers but people at high administration and the last phases of the development is done by teacher.

3

Decision by administration and policy makers like what will be taught, how it will be evaluated and how it will be taught

Sometimes it is not very effective because the people who are teaching the curriculum are not directly involved in its making.

Kowalski,Ulrich C. Reitzug,1993 Creating an Excellent School Hedley Beare,Brian J. Caldwell,Ross H. Millikan,2018-05-11 Originally published in 1989 The pursuit of excellence is much discussed with reference to education but the question remains How can a school become excellent This book demonstrates that excellence depends on good management which in turn depends not only on a clear understanding of good management theory but on the ability to translate theory into practice The authors offer profound insights into three crucial areas of leadership culture structure and public accountability Drawing on areas outside education such as advertising and business they discuss many innovations that are already current flexitime the vertical curriculum mastery learning community support and depict ways in which these can be brought together into a total educational experience More strikingly however they look ahead examining the potential changes to our concept of schooling for instance those brought about by the growth of information technology This book emphasises that at the heart of outstanding schooling are visionary leadership a clear sense of purpose and creatively conceived and flexible support structures

Second International Handbook of Educational Leadership and Administration Kenneth A. Leithwood, P. Hallinger, 2012-12-06 The first International Handbook of Educational Leadership and Administration Leithwood et al was published in 1996 and quickly became something of a best seller for reference works within education Such success we suggest was at least partly due to the unprecedented global waves of concern for improving schools launched in the mid 1980 s combined with a widespread belief in leadership as the single most powerful contribution to such improvement The roots of this belief can be found in evidence produced by the early effective schools research although there is a romance with leadership as an explanation for success in many non school enterprises as well During the two year period during which this current handbook was being written activity in the realms of school leadership school improvement and leadership development gained further momentum The English government created its new National College of School Leadership and several Asian nations announced new initiatives in leadership selection preparation and development
