

The Lymphatic System

Lymph and lymph vessels

Lymph is a clear, colorless fluid that circulates through the lymphatic system. It is composed of water, proteins, and small molecules. Lymph vessels are thin-walled, non-muscular tubes that collect and transport lymph. They are found throughout the body, including in the skin, organs, and bone marrow.

Lymph nodes

Lymph nodes are small, bean-shaped organs that filter lymph and remove any foreign particles, such as bacteria and viruses. They are located throughout the body, often in clusters. Lymph nodes are part of the lymphatic system and play a crucial role in the immune response.

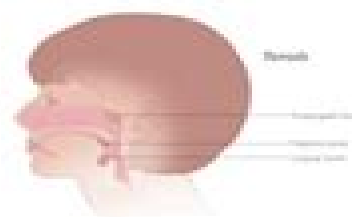

Inflammatory and immune responses

The lymphatic system is involved in both inflammatory and immune responses. Inflammation is a response to injury or infection, characterized by redness, swelling, and pain. The immune response is a response to foreign invaders, such as bacteria and viruses. The lymphatic system helps to transport immune cells to the site of infection and to remove any debris or dead cells.

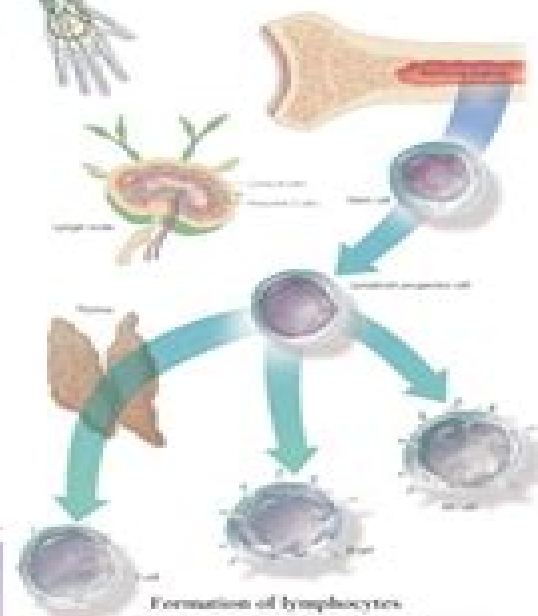

What is the lymphatic system?

The lymphatic system is a network of vessels and organs that help to remove waste and fight infection. It is composed of lymph vessels, lymph nodes, and lymphoid organs. The lymphatic system is part of the immune system and plays a crucial role in maintaining the body's health.

Lymphoid intestinal tissue

Lymphoid intestinal tissue is a type of lymphoid tissue found in the lining of the small intestine. It is composed of lymphocytes and other immune cells. This tissue helps to filter out any harmful substances that enter the body through the digestive tract.

Formation of lymphocytes

Lymphocytes are a type of white blood cell that play a central role in the immune response. They are formed in the bone marrow from hematopoietic stem cells. There are three main types of lymphocytes: B cells, T cells, and natural killer cells. Each type has a specific function in the immune system.
