ON THE 16th JUNE 1837, eighteen-year-old Princess Victoria became queen and the Victorian period in British history had begun. Victoria ruled over Great Britain and Ireland and the British Empire for sixty-four years. This was the most peaceful, generous and progressive period in British history. For the upper and middle classes Victorian Britain offered a full and agreeable life, but the growth of industrial life meant slums and poverty for the poor. Philanthropists tried to help with charitable organizations. Reformers pressed for changes in the system. There were night schools, houses for the destitute, and schemes for training unemployed, and for helping emigrants. Dr Barnardo's Homes came into being, and the Salvation Army was established. The first Education Act was introduced, so letting education within the reach of all children, the poor as well as the rich. Educated and inspired men in the lower class were encouraging to help their own people. The first Co-operative shop opened in 1844. Trade Unions were formed. Young men attended evening classes after a long day's work. They became the inventors, the scientists and the craftsmen of the New Age. And across the seas the British Empire flourished and opened up dark regions to the hopes and ambitions of the new civilization.
