
Service Perspectives for the Digital Library Remote Reference Services

BERNIE SLOAN

We play a cultural role in the sense that librarians have traditionally applied a broader range of knowledge to pieces of information. I think it's high tech and high touch. Bring in high tech, but give it a human face. And that face is the face of a librarian. (Hathorn, 1997)

ABSTRACT

THIS ARTICLE WILL EXPLORE THE ROLE OF THE LIBRARIAN and of the service perspective in the digital library environment. The focus of the article will be limited to the topic of librarian/user collaboration where the librarian and user are not co-located. The role of the librarian will be explored as outlined in the literature on digital libraries, some studies will be examined that attempt to put the service perspective in the digital library, survey existing initiatives in providing library services electronically, and outline potential service perspectives for the digital library.

INTRODUCTION

The digital library offers users the prospect of access to electronic resources at their convenience temporally and spatially. Users do not have to be concerned with the physical library's hours of operation, and users do not have to go physically to the library to access resources.

Much has been written about the digital library. The focus of most studies, papers, and articles has been on the technology or on the types of resources offered. Human interaction in the digital library is discussed far less frequently. One would almost get the impression that the service tradition of the physical library will be unnecessary and redundant in the digital library environment.
