

as seen through sex roles in an urban senior citizens center has historical depth, theoretical sophistication, and humanity.

Part Three: "Dual Aspects of Women: Archetypic Destruction" contains two articles, both dealing with negative aspects of women's images. "Radical Yoruba Female Sexuality: The Witch and Prostitute" analyzes the portrayal of women in contemporary Yoruba theater. It is a most unusual account of modern literature of a tribal people, an aspect of culture change seldom described by anthropologists. "Jive Dope Fiend Whores: In the Street and in Rehabilitation" is a provocative analysis of the psychological and historical image of the black drug-addicted prostitute. Both articles are excellent.

This book suffers from the typical shortcomings of a collection of symposium papers. The articles included in the collection fail to encompass the scope of the subject matter; some areas are overrepresented, and others are neglected. The articles vary in quality. Each of the three sections could easily be expanded into a book.

The editorial introduction summarizes the material to be presented but does not go much beyond that task. The book lacks a comprehensive theoretical orientation, probably because one does not exist at present. The addition of a concluding section summarizing the state of the science in this field would have been a valuable addition to the book. However, the book contains an interesting collection of articles on a neglected aspect of women's roles. Scholars will find it interesting and teachers will find it a valuable source for lectures and readings in a variety of women's studies courses.

SEXUAL EXCITEMENT/SEXUAL PEACE: THE PLACE OF MASTURBATION IN ADULT RELATIONSHIPS. Suzanne Sarnoff and Irving Sarnoff. New York: M. Evans & Co., 1979 (319 pages, $12.50).

The Sarnoffs have two goals for their provocative book: first to provide "a systematic and comprehensive formulation of the implications of masturbation for two basic sources of human realization—love and creativity," and second, "to understand the effects of our own masturbatory urges, inhibitions and conflicts on our individual lives and on our marriage."

Unfortunately for all concerned, their theoretical formulations are wordy, imprecise and weighted with popular humanistic and depth-psychology jargon. Their first-person self-disclosures, by contrast, are detailed, clear and extraordinarily honest, and seem indeed to have helped the Sarnoffs better understand themselves and each other. Too often, however, they generalize their own "urges, inhibitions and conflicts" to the rest of us.

The book's first chapters discuss motives for masturbation, fantasy and orgasm. Subsequent chapters present a developmental analysis of the uses and
