Basil Worsfold,2015-06-30 Excerpt from The Principles of Criticism An Introduction to the Study of Literature The purpose of this book is to present an account of the main principles of literary criticism and to illustrate these principles by passages from great writers The book will therefore be found to contain in addition to the text a collection of noteworthy critical utterances The translations from the Greek Germany and French have been done by the Author References are made with two exceptions to the text of Aristotle by the pages of Immanuel Bekker s large Berlin edition and to that of Plato by the pages of the edition of Henry Stephens Addison is cited by numbers of the Spectator and Lessing by chapters of the Laocoon In the case of other authors the footnotes will sufficiently indicate the sources of reference Both an index of authors and an index of subjects have been provided About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works Some Principles of Literary Criticism Caleb Thomas Winchester,2013-09 This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book without typos from the publisher Not indexed Not illustrated 1899 edition Excerpt chapter second What Is Litebattjre It was stated at the close of the previous chapter that the principles of criticism must be derived from a study of the literature itself that a book is not literature because it conforms to certain rules but rather that these rules are valid because they are drawn from admitted works of literature Obviously then at the outset of our discussion this question presents itself What is the body of writings from which these rules and principles are drawn What is literature Moreover if we can answer this question satisfactorily we may find ourselves advanced some way in our discussion of these principles themselves Since if there be any discoverable essentials of literature as such we shall be most likely to find all valuable critical principles or laws by considering carefully these essentials their relative value the conditions on which they depend and the ways in which they are combined But here we meet a difficulty which constantly recurs in critical discussion the difficulty of giving accurate definition to words in common use with a wide and vague significance Such words as literature as also for other examples beauty poetry imagination idealism are used by us all without any attempt to define for ourselves precisely what we mean by them We find they designate accurately enough the most of the things associated with them in our thought and we do not trouble ourselves if there be so to speak a ragged fringe on either side of the line of their meaning It is only when we try to define such terms that we realize how vague and careless is our use of them We find it difficult to make out with precision the limits of meaning we ourselves would assign to them and when we The Principles of Criticism.
