

Children's online sexual victimization in Australia

The Australian Child Maltreatment Study \(ACMS\) surveyed 3500 Australians aged 16-24 to measure the national prevalence of online sexual victimization (OSV) before age 18.

We asked about experiences of two important types of OSV in childhood:

1. non-consensual sharing of a sexual image of themselves; and
2. online sexual solicitation by an adult (being asked to talk about sex, or send sexual images).

We found OSV experiences are common:

7.6% experienced non-consensual sharing of a sexual image of themselves

17.7% experienced online sexual solicitation by an adult

Children and young people often have these experiences at an early age.

Among those who experienced OSV, it commenced:

	by age 12	by age 15
Non-consensual sharing of a sexual image of themselves	15%	65%
Online sexual solicitation by an adult	25%	80%

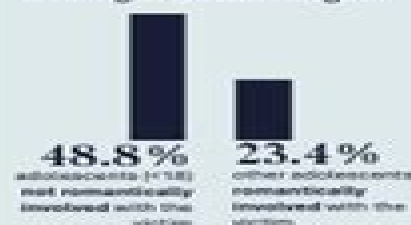

Online sexual victimization in childhood is common in Australia, especially for girls. Depending on the circumstances, it can have serious consequences.

Girls are around three times more likely than boys to have these experiences:

These two types of OSV are most commonly inflicted by different people.

For non-consensual sharing of sexual images:

For online adult sexual solicitation:

Prevention and response to online sexual victimization must be a national priority.

Design and regulation of online environments should embed safety-by-design principles.

Education of children and young people to develop digital citizenship and sexual literacy can assist in prevention.

Parents and child serving workforces can also be supported in understanding these forms of OSV, and in making appropriate responses.
