

Publication details: Brown, T. (2001). Mathematics education and language: interpreting hermeneutics and post-structuralism (Revised second edition). (Mathematics Education Library) Dordrecht: Kluwer.

Abstract: Contemporary thinking on philosophy and the social sciences has primarily focused on the centrality of language in understanding societies and individuals; important developments which have been under-utilised by researchers in mathematics education. In this revised and extended edition this book reaches out to contemporary work in these broader fields, adding new material on how progression in mathematical learning might be variously understood. A new concluding chapter considers how teachers experience the new demands they face.

For a person, who has for a long time argued for a philosophical basis to mathematics education, it is a pleasure to read the manuscript and to realise how many different sources the author has read, used and integrated into his presentation and teaching practice. It is one of the most interesting professional books I have had in my hands for a long time; very well founded, analysing and developing further quite recent hot issues, presenting convincing new examples of teaching and teacher education, and providing for a promising integration of theory and practice. The power of the book is the reconciliation of constructivism and social interactionism from the perspective of a post-modern hermeneutics, leading to a view of language... that enables the development of new and apparently effective approaches in mathematics education. As an important advantage, I realise, that the author has limited himself to use the original main sources in philosophy rather than referring to secondary and tertiary commentators of these ... I find important the extension of the concept of research towards a covering of teachers' writings about their own practice as a means for improving their reflection and in consequence for changing their teaching practice. Excellent is the idea of using writing as a means for self-reflection in teacher education as well as for the improvement of in-service teachers... The international community should learn and adopt such techniques. ... It is a remarkable enrichment of our professional literature in terms of theoretical reflection and foundation as well as through the convincing examples from teaching practice and the style in which it is written. Striking new perspectives are opened for teachers as well as for researchers. (Prof. Heinrich Bauersfeld, Germany.)

Brown is involved in an extremely important project in trying to develop such a theoretical frame.... I find Mathematics Education and Language interesting and important. (Prof. Ole Skovsmose, Denmark, ZDM, 1998, 98, 138-141.)

an excellent starting place for anyone seeking a broader introduction to contemporary theory and philosophy than is generally available with the comparatively insular world of mathematics education (Prof. Brent Davis, Canada, Journal of Research in Mathematics Education 1999, 111-116.)
