

The Scientific Method.

The scientific method sounds far more complex than it is, in reality it is the application of common sense in an organized and objective manner. The Scientific Method is a systematic process applied by many branches of science (Geology, Geography, Physics, Mathematics, Chemistry and Biology) for experimentation that is used to explore observations and answer questions. Scientists apply the scientific method to search for cause and effect relationships in nature. In short an experiment is designed so that changes to one variable cause something else to differ in a predictable way.

The scientific method is one of the greatest tools a professional scientist can employ, it will also help you to develop as a scientist and help you understand many concepts related to Earth Science. It can be applied by the following (simplistic) bullet points and as illustrated in the diagram below. The scientific method is a technique to ask and answer scientific questions by undertaking observations and conducting experiments.

- The systematic steps of the scientific method are:
- Design/ask a question
- Observations/measurements
- Form a Hypothesis
- Conduct experiment to test the hypothesis
- Analysis of the data/Draw conclusion
- Accept or reject the hypothesis
- Report results/conclusions of experiment.
- It is essential for your experiment to be a fair test and with as little biases as possible. A "fair test" occurs when you change only one variable and keep all other conditions the same, even if you do not like or agree with the observations/data.

The scientific method process: from perceptions, to observations, reasoning, hypothesis, predictions and possibly to a general theory.
