Parents' Magazine & Better Homemaking, 1952 America's 1 family magazine The toad that never quite grew up... Mehran Salehpour, 2023-09-18 This is a book for mature men with high intrinsic immaturity who enjoy simple things in life. No effort has been made in being politically correct with regards to religion, gender, ethnicity or other sensitive matters of general concern. It is for those who still can laugh at a poo story. The book, although harmless, could easily upset a lot of morality fixated individuals, especially the ethical ones. Consequently, they are advised to pick up another more serious book and leave this one where it is. The story is that of a teenage foreign student in England during the 1970s, spanning over a few years. It starts with the time in an English boarding school. After getting expelled at the age of sixteen, he moves into a house with three other teenagers and starts high school studies. The university studies follow, and life experiences flourish. It is more or less a collection of stories you might tell a friend in a pub. Stories with high a level of juvenescence with very little philosophical repercussions Farm Journal, 1922
