2. The pituitary gland is often called the "master gland" because it controls the activity of many other endocrine glands. It produces growth hormone, which stimulates growth. It also produces prolactin, which stimulates milk production in the breasts.

3. The adrenal glands are located on top of the kidneys. They produce two types of hormones. The outer layer produces epinephrine and norepinephrine, which are involved in the "fight or flight" response. The inner layer produces cortisol, which helps regulate metabolism and immune response.
