Bullitt, 1969 Side-by-Side Survey Susan Alcock, John Cherry, 2016-10-02 Twenty years ago John Cherry looked forward to the day when archaeological survey projects working around the Mediterranean region the Frogs round the pond would begin to compare and synthesize the information they had collected He anticipated researchers tackling big questions of interregional scope in new and interesting ways working at a geographical scale considerably larger than that of the individual survey Was his optimism misplaced Despite the extraordinary growth of interest in field survey projects and regional analysis and despite the developments in survey methodology that have been discussed and implemented in the past two decades few scholars have attempted to use survey data in a comparative mode and to answer the broad scale questions confronting social historians In this volume which is the outcome of an advanced Workshop held at the University of Michigan in 2002 a number of prominent archaeologists return to the question of comparability They discuss the potential benefits of working in a comparative format with evidence from many different Mediterranean survey projects and consider the practical problems that present roadblocks to achieving that objective From mapping and manuring to human settlement and demography environment and culture each addresses different questions often with quite different approaches together they offer a range of perspectives on how to put surveys side by side Contributors include Susan E Alcock John Cherry Jack L Davis Peter Attema Martijn van Leusen James C Wright Robin Osborne David Mattingly T J Wilkinson and Richard E Blanton

Dealing with biases Hendrik Feiken,2014-09-18 This books explores the bias that is introduced by erosion and sedimentation on the distribution of archaeological materials in Mediterranean landscapes It describes innovative and interdisciplinary work that led to the formulation of a broad range of geo archeological approaches that are applied to two Italian areas studied intensively by the Groningen Institute of Archaeology the Pontine Region in South Lazio and the Raganello Basin in North Calabria The approaches deal with geological biases affecting the study of protohistoric remains in the sedimentary part of the Pontine plain the development of a detailed landscape classification approach to predict and test site location preferences and survey biases in the uplands of both study areas and the development and evaluation of an innovative computerised landscape evolution model for a test area in the Raganello Basin uplands In addition to the presented case study this book also shows how the three geo archaeological approaches can be applied in a wider context to quantitatively understand how erosion and sedimentation bias our understanding of archaeological records

Ancient Marbles to American Shores Stephen L. Dyson, 2016-11-11 In Ancient Marbles to American Shores Stephen L. Dyson uncovers the history of classical archaeology in the United States by exploring the people and programs that gave birth to archaeology as a discipline in this country He puts aside the common formula of chronicling great digs great discoveries and great men in favor of a cultural ideological and institutional history of the subject The book explores the ways American contact with the monuments of Greece and Rome affected the national consciousness It discusses how the spread of classical style laid the groundwork for the development of the discipline after the Civil War and examines the period before World War I when most of the institutions that led to the establishment of the discipline as well as the first generation of American classical archaeologists were created It looks at the role classical archaeology played in the development of the American art museum since the later nineteenth century and considers changes in American classical archaeology from World War II to the mid 1970s Filling the void of information on the history of classical archaeology in the United States this lively book is a valuable contribution to literature on a subject which is enjoying ever increasing interest and attention
