Partners in Planning Susan B. Rifkin, Pat Pridmore, 2001 Partners in Planning is about how professionals can work with local lay people in an equal partnership to support development programmes particularly in the areas of health and education. It discusses the importance of generating information encouraging active participation by those benefiting from the development programmes and the subsequent empowerment of these people to give them the experience and confidence needed to influence the decisions that affect their daily lives. A very welcome addition to the practical side of health promotion, Laverack's brief and simply worded text weaves together just the right balance of theory, evidence, tips and case studies to satisfy the new learner looking to gain a grasp of health promotion's empowering whole while still offering new insights to the more seasoned practitioner. Ronald Labont, Institute of Population Health, University of Ottawa. How can health promotion practitioners help communities to become more empowered? How do you encourage different communities to work together towards a shared goal? How can you focus your resources to be most effective in building empowered communities? How do you evaluate your success and failures in building empowered communities? Power and empowerment are two complex concepts that are central to health promotion practice. People experience empowerment in many different ways and this book explains an approach that has been used by health promoters to intentionally build and evaluate empowerment. The book provides a special focus on communities and is illustrated throughout with useful field experiences in the United Kingdom, Asia, North America, the Pacific region and Africa. The book aims to provide the reader with an understanding of the key concepts of power and empowerment and the link to improved health outcomes in the context of health promotion programmes. An understanding of practical approaches that can be used in health promotion programming to build and evaluate empowered communities. Many professionals in health education and community service roles are caught in a particular bind of identity they live in a complex social borderland of credibility and professional authority while experiencing or having experienced the same discrimination violence or trauma that they are committed to conquering For some the disclosure of their own stories of marginalization has become a tool for advocacy for telling a larger truth for others self disclosure is a more personal action intended to assist isolated others in developing trust and connection Linde Zingaro a lifelong social service worker and activist interviewed several colleagues who have chosen to speak out in this way talking with them about their ethics and intentions and collaborating to identify some of the risks of negative personal and professional consequences for the practitioner. She uses their voices and her own to illustrate some of the ways that these people have learned to safely and effectively use the transformative potential of storytelling as significant social action. This examination of speaking out as a meaningful social practice may help other workers, activists, and community researchers in their efforts to be heard in the interests of a more just society.
