This electronic version has been made available under a Creative Commons BY NC ND open access license Negotiating Nursing explores how the Queen Alexandra's Imperial Military Nursing Service Q A's salvaged their soldier patients within the sensitive gender negotiations of what should and could constitute nursing work and where that work could occur The book argues that the Q A's an entirely female force during the Second World War were essential to recovering men from the battlefield and for the war despite concerns about women's presence on the frontline Using personal testimony the book maps the developments in nurses work as they created a legitimate space for themselves in war zones and established their position as the expert at the bedside Yet despite the acknowledgement of nurses vital role in the medical service their position was gendered As the women of Britain were returned to the home post war it was the military nurses womanhood that stymied their considerable skills from being transferred to the new welfare state

Journal of Rehabilitation Research and Development, 1989      Silence, Scapegoats, Self-reflection Volker Roelcke, Sascha Topp, Etienne Lepicard, 2015-01-28

Since the end of World War II Nazi medical atrocities have been a topic of ambivalent reactions and debates both in Germany and internationally An early period of silence was followed by attempts of victims and representatives of medical organisations to describe what happened Varying narratives developed some of which had a stabilizing function for the identity of the profession whereas others had a critical and de stabilizing function In today's international debates in the field of medical ethics there are frequent references to Nazi medical atrocities in particular in the context of discussions about research on human subjects and on euthanasia The volume analyses the narratives on Nazi medical atrocities their historicity in different stages of post war medicine as well as in the international discourse on biomedical ethics
