

CHAPTER 1: MARKETING'S VALUE TO CONSUMERS, FIRMS, AND SOCIETY

CHAPTER 1—COMMENTS ON QUESTIONS AND PROBLEMS

- 1- 1. This question is intended to stimulate the same kind of thinking that is prompted by the introduction to the chapter. The point is to encourage students to take a more personal view of marketing—and how it affects their lives. Clearly, different students will provide different types of responses. At this early point in the class, some students will still take a narrow view—and focus on advertising they heard or on a specific product they tried. Others will have thought in more depth about the thrust of the chapter—and they will deal with a broader set of activities and marketing influences.
- 1- 2. This is really just a contemporary variation on the “better mousetrap” line of thought—framed in the context of an important new technology. Even so, it deals with the question of whether it is “enough” just to develop a good new product that serves an important need. It is certainly possible that web-surfing consumers—on their own initiative—might be able to use the Internet to find out about an important new product and then could go further and get all of the information about it that they might need. But, as a practical matter, that was also true for most new products before the Internet existed. The problem is that with millions of pages of material on the Internet few consumers are likely to simply stumble across information that they need. There are software tools that make it efficient to find information that they know they want, but if they don't know they want it they won't look.
- 1- 3. The macro view of marketing is concerned with how a whole marketing system works, while the micro view of marketing is concerned with how individual firms do and/or should operate. In a market-directed economy, the actions of individual firms and consumers pretty much determine how the macro system works. But it is possible for others, including the government, to modify the macro-marketing system. It is important to see that individual business firms are only part of the macro-marketing system and their role and apparent efficiency may be affected by others—including consumers and the government; i.e., consumers acting through their representatives.
- 1- 4. Answers to this question will vary from student to student. The point of the question is to prompt the student to think more deeply about the concepts of separation of information and separation of time between consumers and producers. Exhibit 1-1, which is referenced in the question, appears on page 9 of the text. Separation of time results because consumers may not want to consume goods at the time they are produced, and time may be required to transport goods from producer to consumer. Student responses about how these separations are overcome will usually focus on transporting, storing, and functions provided by intermediaries.
- Separation of information occurs because producers do not know who needs what, where, when and at what price. Consumers do not know what is available from whom, where, when and at what price. For example, if you want to take a trip by plane you usually know where you want to go and when, but you typically have little idea about what airline, what flight, and at what cost.
