Revolution

The first social revolution of the twentieth century erupted in 1910 when Mexicans rose up to overthrow the dictator, Porfirio Díaz, thus concluding efforts to forge a nation-state. Groups joined the revolution for wildly different reasons, reflecting widespread dissatisfaction with Díaz and the global economy. Peasants, urban workers, and the burgeoning professional class united around a nationalist spirit in an effort to wrest control of natural resources, infrastructure, and domestic politics from foreign domination. Revolutionary icons emerged—such as Pancho Villa and Emiliano Zapata—each representing these different sectors.
