Research

new information of a certain topic/issue.

Quantitative Research

Types of research that uses statistical treatment/Tool.

Variables

simply refers to a person, place, thing, or phenomenon that you are trying to measure in some way.

Independent Variable

a variable whose variation does not depend on that of another. Its is the cause on the study. It can stand alone and isn't changed by the other variables. It is the variable that researcher manipulates or changes, and is assured to have a direct effect on the dependent variable.

Dependent Variable

a variable whose value depends on that of another. It is the effect on the study. It is the variable being measured and tested in an experiment.

Research Design

refers to overall strategy that choose in order to integrate the different components of the study in a coherent and logic way, thereby ensuring you will effectively address the research problem.

Experimental Research Design

allows the researcher to control the situation. In so doing, it allows the researcher to answer the question, "What causes something to occur?"

Allows the researcher to identify cause and effect relationship between variables and to distinguish place to effects from treatment effects.

Quasi-experimental

the researcher can collect more data, either by scheduling more observations or finding more existing measures.

Non-experimental research design observes the phenomena as they occur naturally and no external variables are introduced.

- In this research design, the variables are not deliberately manipulated nor is the setting controlled.
- Researcher collect data without making changes or introducing treatments.

Descriptive Research design

main purpose is to observe, describe, and document aspects of a situation as it naturally occurs and sometimes to serve as a starting point for hypothesis generation or theory development.

Survey

research design used when the researcher intends to provide a quantitative or numeric description or trends, attitude or opinions of a population by studying a sample of that population.

Case study

define as an in-depth study of an individual or group of individuals

Correlational

you are trying to determine if there is a relationship (or covariation) between the 2 variables (a similarity between them, not a difference between their means).

Ex- Post Facto Research Design

used to investigate causal relationships. They experiment whether one or more pre-existing conditions could possibly have caused subsequent differences in groups of subjects.

Comparative Design

involves comparing and contrasting two or more samples of study subjects on one or more variables, often at a single point of time.

- This design is used to compare two distinct groups on the basis of selected attributes such as knowledge level, perceptions, and attitudes, physical or psychological symptoms.
