Popular American Marbles Dean Six,2006-12 Over 360 beautiful color photos display machine made marbles in many varieties They were produced by American manufacturers including Alley Agate Champion Jackson Marble Master Glass Playrite and Vacor Marbles displayed include Cat s Eyes Glassies Moss Agates Opals Patches Swirls and more The text provides fascinating facts about each company s marble production A helpful rating system indicates which marble types from each firm were its good better or best work A bibliography and index are included Values for the marbles displayed are found in the captions This book will be a thrill for all who enjoy a passion for beautiful glass The Kings of the Rings Scott Rice McBride,2017-11-20 The game of marbles has been around since the beginning of play Archeological sites around the world have yielded small round objects of stone clay and wood Many of the sites were graves of children indicating they were of value to their owners During the nineteenth and twentieth centuries marbles grew in popularity Marbles was a game that transcended economic ethnic and gender lines While generally regarded as a boys game girls and boys played together on playgrounds and empty lots It didn t require much equipment only a few marbles an open place and a child s imagination It could be played outdoors or indoors Rules and the games played were determined locally by the children playing the game Any disagreements about either were settled by the players No formal rules existed until the twentieth century In the United States marbles were impacted by the Industrial Revolution As families moved from farms to cities the children took their marbles with them Children of factory workers and factory owners could be found in the same game Organized marble tournaments began popping up in cities across the United States in the 1920s sponsored by local newspapers civic organizations or recreation departments In 1922 the first National Marble Tournament was organized in Wildwood New Jersey By 1925 the national tournament hosted representatives from more than forty cities across the country The popularity of marbles continued to grow through the 1930s World War II led to a suspension of national marble tournaments The national Veterans of Foreign Wars decided to make local and national marble tournaments one of their national youth programs in 1947 Several social factors may have contributed to the program development Troops returning from World War

II The marble tournament offered a chance for the returning servicemen to integrate into local society upon their return Offering a positive male influence to postwar boys Many boys born after 1930 had grown up without a positive male influence in their lives Organized marble tournaments at local and city levels provided the youth with that positive male role model Familiarity with the game The game of marbles had a long history in the United States dating back to the early 1800s Many VFW members had played marbles as children and it easily translated to a popular national activity Charles Ralls the VFW commander in chief in 1951 addressed the reasons for the marble program He wrote The game of marbles helps teach the important requirements for good citizenship It might be well if a lot of grownups learned to play the game To reach the marble championship class one has to develop persistence and calm judgement One has to have skill and a determination to do the job well Also the game of marbles calls for fair play and right attitudes Every player is as good as his shooting A good loser always comes up smiling Every boy should be given the right to prove his best qualities regardless of religious racial or social status Local state and national VFW members spent many hours sponsoring organizing and conducting marble tournaments so young men could learn sportsmanship persistence calm judgment determination fair play and good attitudes when facing adversity The Marble Maker Sacha Cotter, 2016 A child dreams of inventing a new marble and having the recipe appear in The Book of Marbles In a chaotic lab with a sheep as an assistant and using ingredients as diverse as teeth bling from a retired rapper s three pints of swooshy night air s and a snippet from a sheep s fringe s the child lights up the stoves and with a bang marbles that have never been seen before rain down
