The Integrated Scientist-Practitioner: A New Model for Combining Research and Clinical Practice in Fee-For-Service Settings

The research article offers a novel "clinical-research social business model" as a possible solution to the long-standing challenge of merging scientific research with clinical practice in psychology. Despite the intended scientist-practitioner training paradigm and APA standards that emphasize research-practice integration, the authors contend that this ideal remains elusive for the majority of psychologists working in applied settings. They identify several key contributors to this disconnect, including reduced funding for psychosocial research, fewer tenure-track academic positions, changes in healthcare reimbursement models, and the close relationship between providing clinical services and monetary rewards in fee-for-service settings. These trends create substantial challenges, but they also provide options for exploring alternate models for conducting psychological research outside of traditional academia.

The methodology section describes the authors' motives and rationales for developing a business to fund research activities outside of academia. This includes their training in the scientist-practitioner model, concerns about declining external funding prospects, and a desire to live in a specific geographic region. The authors then present a case study of the implementation of their "clinical-research social business model" at the Portland Psychotherapy Clinic, Research, and Training Center, which they co-founded (LeJeune 422). This model means using profits from
