

Implementing School Restructuring in the Inner City

Louis F. Mirón, Edward P. St. John, and Betty Davidson

The purpose of this research was to examine school reform at a local level. Our analysis centered on the impact that the Accelerated Schools model had on two inner-city elementary schools in New Orleans. Key to our interpretation was addressing prevalent social issues, including poverty, racism, and single-parent families, embedded in everyday life in urban communities. The findings illuminate the need to resolve racial, social, and ideological conflicts for school change to take root in inner-city schools.

Today, there is much discussion of the impact of school reform on teaching and learning, school organization, and parental involvement. Over a decade has passed since the National Commission on Excellence in Education issued its landmark A Nation at Risk report wherein it described the nation's system of public schools as "a rising tide of mediocrity" (NCEE, 1983, p. 5). Numerous studies have documented the exhaustive production of reform programs at all levels of the public school system—federal, state, and local. Research groups, such as the Center for Policy Research in Education, have sought to quantify the impact of reform activities on such outcome measures as student achievement and curriculum change (Clune, 1989).

The bulk of reform¹ initiatives has concentrated on the state level. By and large state reforms have either bypassed urban schools and school districts (Levin, 1988), or the special conditions facing these schools (Boyd, 1989; Davis & McCaul, 1991; Kozol, 1991; Mirón, 1990) have made it difficult to implement changes in ways that are meaningful to principals, teachers, students, and parents in inner-city schools on a day-to-day basis. The national educational reform movement has failed to address the underlying social issues

Schools Making a Difference Martin Thrupp,1999-05-16 Does an effective school really come about through the actions of teachers and school leaders or does it also require an advantaged student intake This question reflects a longstanding research debate about whether or not the social class mix of a school s student intake has much effect on individual achievement Schools Making a Difference Let s Be Realistic presents new evidence which suggests that school mix is likely to be important because of the way many school

processes are deeply influenced by student intake characteristics Low socioeconomic schools face numerous intake related constraints which make them highly resistant to improvement efforts By suggesting that failing schools are often overwhelmed rather than ineffective this book provides a sympathetic reappraisal of the performance of teachers and school leaders in such schools It also offers a critical response to the often unrealistic claims of the school effectiveness and school improvement movement and a fresh critique of market reforms in education Resources in Education ,2001-10

Teachers and Schooling Making A Difference Pam Christie,Bob Lingard,2020-08-04 Teachers Schooling Making a Difference takes seriously the question that teachers ask What do I do on Monday and does provide answers From the foreword by Professor Michael Apple University of Wisconsin Education debates are currently dominated by free market ideologists who push privatisation and competition as the answer to every problem regardless of damage to schools and pupils Teachers Schooling Making a Difference shows that we can think about education in a far more productive way Professor R W Connell University of Sydney This book is a lesson in making hope practical It makes a compelling argument for recognising supporting and enabling teachers as central to progressive school reform Professor Jenny Ozga University of Edinburgh What teachers do in the classroom really matters even though schools cannot compensate fully for difficulties children may face at home and in society Good teachers and good schools have been making a difference in children s lives for generations but what exactly is it that works Based on extensive research in 1000 primary and secondary classrooms this book examines the tough questions about teaching methods curriculum assessment and teachers professionalism The authors isolate the key elements that make the difference in the classroom and offer teachers practical approaches to working with all their students Teachers and Schools Making a Difference is essential reading for teachers and school administrators who want to improve their professional skills and offer a genuinely democratic education School Restructuring and Student Achievement in Washington State ,1999
