

MACROECONOMIC POLICY

- In terms of short-to-medium term stabilization policy, there are two main instruments: fiscal and monetary policy
- In a closed economy there are two main targets/objectives: low inflation and low unemployment (or high employment)
- Generally, one needs a many instruments as targets, and one should assign instruments to targets appropriately
- In an open economy, the exchange rate may be a target, or completely fixed, in which case monetary policy gets subordinated. Eurozone membership is an extreme case of this
- In small open economies fiscal policy can be somewhat effective, but import leakages can limit effectiveness severely
- For Ireland, instead of monetary policy (control of M_s or of Short-term nominal Int rate), we now see that financial regulation is central to macroeconomic stability
