Vision guardians for community eye health: the LV Prasad Eye Institute model in India

Vision guardians recruited from the local community can engage with people to support their eye care in the long term.

A patient responding to a vision chart, INDIA.

Vision loss affects over a billion people worldwide.¹ Although over 90% of vision loss is avoidable, several barriers limit the availability and uptake of services.² The World Health Organization has adopted 'universal eye health' as a part of universal health coverage, which aims to ensure that "all people have access to promotive, preventive, curative and rehabilitative health services, of sufficient quality to be effective, while also ensuring that people do not suffer financial hardship when paying for these services."³

Community engagement is vital for the successful implementation of health interventions at a place where people need services. With this in mind, LV Prasad Eye Institute (LVPEI) developed a pyramidal eye care model which has vision guardians as its foundation (Figure 1).

Vision guardians are the part of the eye care system that is closest to the community. Vision guardians form an essential link that connects eye care services with the community, thereby providing a framework for community engagement on a continuous basis.^{4,5}

Vision guardians are recruited from the local community. They are people who know the community and are known in the community; this promotes mutual trust and makes their work much easier. Each vision guardian looks after the eye health of about 5,000 community members. Their activities include:

- door-to-door vision screening to identify people with eye health issues
- eye health screening in schools
- referring people to the next level of care
- checking that patients with sight-threatening eye conditions have attended their referral appointments
- monitoring patients after surgery
- supporting community health activities, including health promotion and awareness programmes
- checking up on vulnerable individuals
- engaging with all stakeholders in the community: government and non-government bodies as well as village groups, including village health committees.

Selection, recruitment, and training of vision guardians

Vision guardians are either volunteers who work part time, or are employed full time (and paid) by LV Prasad Eye Institute (LVPEI). Community organisations identify potential candidates from the local area for enrolment as vision guardians. Community involvement in the selection and recruitment of vision guardians promotes local ownership and acceptance of vision guardians by
