Substance and Style

Betsy P. Graham

Have you ever been stuck in a room with a blank page in front of you? It's a common experience for many writers. The problem is not that you don't know what to write, but that you don't know how to write it. The solution is to write what you know, and to write it in a way that is both interesting and informative. This is the key to successful magazine article writing. It's not about being clever or showing off. It's about being honest and sharing your knowledge with others. When you write what you know, you are more likely to engage your readers and to provide them with valuable information. So, the next time you sit down to write, don't worry about what you don't know. Instead, focus on what you do know, and write it in a way that is both interesting and informative. This is the key to successful magazine article writing.
