Principles Of Military Communication Systems:

Principles of Military Communication Systems Don J. Torrieri, 1981 Tactical Communications for the Digitized Battlefield Michael J. Ryan, Michael R. Frater, 2002 Traditional tactical communications systems consist of a number of separate subsystems with little interworking between them and with external sensors and weapons systems Combat net radio CNR has provided the high mobility communications required by combat troops while trunk communications systems have provided high capacity communications between headquarters at the expense of mobility The focus of this book is on new information age technologies that promise to offer seamless integration of real time data sharing creating a single logical network architecture to facilitate the movement of data throughout the battlespace Because the structure of this network is constrained by the fundamental trade off between range mobility and capacity that applies to all communications systems this network is unlikely to be based on a single network technology This book presents an architecture for this network and shows how its subsystems can be integrated to form a single logical network Principles of Military Communications for C3I (Command, Control, Communications and Intelligence). Digital Satellite Communications Systems and Technologies A. Nejat Ince, 2012-12-06 Among the space activities of the last three decades satellite communications SATCOM has found the widest application in meeting both civil and military communications requirements Several international regional and national SATCOM systems of increasing capacity capability and complexity have been and are being implemented over the years The latest versions are utilizing such concepts as spot beams processing transponders in SS TDMA and operations in different frequency bands including the EHF band On the military side the United States of America the United Kingdom France and NATO the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation have been the only owners and operators of military SATCOM systems in the West The systems in being and under development use satellites and ground terminals with characteristics which differ from the civilian ones with respect to frequency bands utilised and survivability and interoperability The SATCOM has given the military users the potential of having much needed mobility flexibility and survivability in strategic and tactical communications for land sea and air operations It must however be said particularly for the military SATCOM systems that they have been evolved in big jumps both in time and capability each jump involving the deployment of two or three often specially designed large satellites large expenses and rather traumatic transition between jumps Despite these undesirable features these systems did not have the required degree of suevivability and flexibility

Schmitt,2017-07-05 The essays selected for the first part of this volume offer an insight into the development as distinguished from the history of international humanitarian law The focus of the majority of the works reprinted here is on an analysis of the adequacy of the law as it stood at the time of the respective publication and in the light of existing contemporary armed conflicts and military operations. Thus the reader is afforded an in depth look at the early roots of international humanitarian law, the continuing relevance of that body of law despite advances in weapons technology and the efforts to progressively develop it. International humanitarian law's development cannot be considered in isolation from its principles. The essays selected for the second part of the volume deal with the two fundamental principles underlying all of international humanitarian law: humanity and military necessity. The articles on the principles of humanity include reflections on the famous Martens Clause and the analyses of military necessity take no account of Kriegsraison. Moreover, they offer proof of the customary character of the principle of distinction in land, air and naval warfare. Military
