FIG. 39

Figures 38, 39 and 40

Three secretaires, made by Ricomeni for Marie-Annoisette, were all delivered to Versailles between 1780 and 1783. The middle secretaire (FIG. 39) was made in 1781, the left (FIG. 38) in 1782 and the right (FIG. 40) in 1783.

The bronze mounts play a major decorative role in the design of the object and are feminine in style. Flowers, which on the earlier secrétaires were featured as subjects for marquetry, appear here in the form of minute three-dimensional arrangements and sprays within the bronze mounts. The central oval bronze plaque depicts a Sacrifice to Love and the rectangular plaque in the frieze, Mercury with two naked children. Decorating furniture with representations of chubby infants had now become more appropriate given Marie-Annoisette's status as a mother, particularly after the birth of the Dauphin in 1781. In their delicacy and complexity, and in their application as simple moulding frames for each panel of the secrets, the bronze mounts achieve an unprecedented degree of refinement.

Secrétaire à abattant, by Ricomeni, 1783 (fig. 40)

In the same year, 1783, another secrétaire of very similar architectural design was delivered for Marie-Annoisette, this time to the Petit Trianon at Versailles. In form, it shares the same basic design as the other secretaires. It is veneered in a grille-like marquetry pattern which approximates to parquetry but is actually a free-work design encompassing many lozenges, each of which contains a stylised

Taking Shape Martina Droth, Penelope Curtis, 2009 This exhibition challenges the reasons why sculpture is usually considered alone in the gallery and the decorative arts are considered as part of a period setting It suggests that by breaking away from these conventional categories we can see how sculpture is also part of a spatial conversation and how furniture and fittings can be appreciated as unique works With five original essays and forty complete catalogue entries this publication both documents an exhibition and goes beyond it opening our eyes to the fluidity of formal language in the long eighteenth century and to the ways in which objects can change according to whether they are seen together or apart as mobile or fixed as two or three dimensional as ideal or as functional Book Jacket
