

Analysis of England in 1819

Lines 1-4 : An old, mad, blind, despised, and dying King;Princes, the dregs of their dull race, who flowThrough public scorn,—mud from a muddy spring;Rulers who neither see nor feel nor know,

In the first lines of "England in 1819" the speaker starts off with a bang. He calls the king "old, mad, blind, despised, and dying". Each of these words comes as something of a shock with their stressed syllables. They also work as a hook to pull the reader in, making someone want to find out more about this terrible king (King George III) and the state of the world in 1819. The poet goes on, adding that it's not just the king who is useless, the princes are too,when the king dies, nothing by necessity is going to change. The same type of leadership is lined up for the next generations. They are constantly scorned by the public. The "Rulers" of England do not understand their own country.

Lines 5-7: But leechlike to their fainting country clingTill they drop, blind in blood, without a blow.A people starved and stabbed in th' untilled field;

In the next lines, the speaker describes the princes and all those of royal blood as "leechlike". This simile compares them to creatures, far from human, who feed off of others. In this case, they are feeding off society—those they are supposed to protect. Moving away from the princes and towards those the speaker sees as truly mattering, he adds that the people are "starved and stabbed". This excellent example of alliteration describes how oppressed the English people are. They are hungry and working without benefits to their lives. These lines might also refer to the Peterloo Massacre that occurred in August of that year.

Lines 8-14 :An army, whom libertickle and prey Makes as a two-edged sword to all who wield;Golden and sanguine laws which tempt and slay;Religion Christless, Godless—a book sealed;A senate, Time's worst statute, unrepealed—Are graves from which a glorious Phantom may Burst, to illumine our tempestuous day.

Shelley describes the army. Here, he says that they are two-sided. They are used by the government to repress the liberty that the English people deserve. The people are further repressed by the laws their government passes. They benefit the wealthy and further harm the poor and middle class.

Religion has also been impacted. It is not, the speaker says, "Godless" and "Christless". It has lost everything that made it what it was. The bible is sealed shut meaning that it is never read. The principles of religious life are not applied. This relates to "Time's worst statute" in the following line. This is an allusion to a law under which Roman Catholics were not allowed to vote or sit in Parliament, along with several other restrictions. All of the things that Shelley's speaker has mentioned so far are the "grave" that change is going to come bursting out of. At some point, the light is going to come to "illumine" the "tempestuous day" England has been experiencing.
