Resnik,1997 Mathematics as a Science of Patterns is the definitive exposition of a system of ideas about the nature of mathematics which Michael Resnik has been elaborating for a number of years In calling mathematics a science he implies that it has a factual subject matter and that mathematical knowledge is on a par with other scientific knowledge in calling it a science of patterns he expresses his commitment to a structuralist philosophy of mathematics He links this to a defence of realism about the metaphysics of mathematics the view that mathematics is about things that really exist Resnik's distinctive philosophy of mathematics is here presented in an accessible and systematic form it will be of value not only to specialists in this area but to philosophers mathematicians and logicians interested in the relationship between these three disciplines or in truth realism and epistemology properties usually attributed to them but absent intentional properties Specifically it is argued that the so called propositional attitudes possess logico syntactic properties whose postulation plays an important role in addressing the challenge of reconciling intentional anti realism with beliefs being true or having alternative epistemic merits the argument from the predictive and explanatory success of content ascription for intentional realism and the cognitive suicide objection to views that deny intentionality As part of the rejection of this final objection intentional anti realism is presented as a radical view which claims Nothing can possess intentional content but not that nothing can possess intentional content and it is argued that this is a legitimate characteristic of radical philosophy In spite of rejecting the claim that talk intentional anti realism gives clear sense to its dispute with its rivals as well as to its own superiority Various arguments for intentional anti realism are presented One argument rejects all possible accounts of intentionality namely primitivism intrinsic reductionism the prominent example of which is the phenomenal intentionality thesis and extrinsic reductionism that is reductive naturalistic accounts According to another argument since intentional properties are shown to be dispensable for all possibly relevant purposes and no sound arguments support the claim that they ever are instantiated the application of Ockham s razor shows that no such properties ever are instantiated and another step shows that neither can they be
