Primary Prevention Of Coronary Heart Disease:

Prevention of Coronary Heart Disease, 1999 Prevention of Myocardial Infarction JoAnn E. Manson, 1996 Coronary heart disease remains the leading cause of death in both men and women in most industrialized countries Yet it is largely preventable and health care providers can acquire the skills to help their patients reduce their risks substantially Traditional risk factors such as cigarette smoking hypercholesterolemia hypertension sedentary lifestyle obesity and glucose intolerance explain a major proportion of coronary events Recent evidence also suggests important adjunctive roles for hormone replacement therapy in postmenopausal women and aspirin prophylaxis in individuals at high risk of a first myocardial infarction Emerging evidence indicates an important role for diet in the prevention of heart disease Although the importance of lifestyle and behavioral modifications may well be known among physicians and other health care providers the implementation of this knowledge has been limited One reason is that the information supporting the value feasibility and cost effectiveness of risk reduction strategies has not been previously synthesized and made widely available to health care providers in office and community settings Prevention of Myocardial Infarction fills these critical gaps by providing a state of the art compendium of the scientific evidence on the efficacy of coronary disease prevention while focusing on helping clinicians develop intervention skills to utilize available knowledge Chapters by leading authorities in cardiovascular epidemiology clinical cardiology cost effectiveness analysis and public health translate the theory of preventive cardiology into feasible implementation The counseling and other intervention strategies described in this textbook have documented clinical efficacy and cost effectiveness and they require little time to learn or implement The book is written mainly for primary care providers including general internists and family physicians but will also be of interest to medical subspecialties such as cardiologists and endocrinologists as well as medical students dietitians psychologists epidemiologists and students practitioners and researchers in public health Lipids and the Primary Prevention of Coronary Heart Disease, 1999

Prevention of Coronary Heart Disease Harumi Okuyama, 2007 This publication is organized in an exceptional way Each chapter introduces several completed clinical trials and provides the original conclusions and discussions of the results The authors then contribute their own comments and interpretations of the findings challenging the prevailing belief that serum cholesterol is a mediator of disease which is increased by eating saturated fats and decreased by eating polyunsaturated fats They argue that upon closer scrutiny the diet recommendations based on the cholesterol hypothesis are essentially ineffective in reducing serum cholesterol levels in the long run Instead it is proposed that traditional cholesterol biomarkers are of different significance in short and long term interventions due to the feedback control mechanisms in the body Even more important the association of high serum cholesterol values with high coronary heart disease mortality is not consistent when different populations are compared This mortality rate may simply reflect the incidence and severity of familial hypercholesterolemia cases This agrees with the observation that higher serum cholesterol values associate with lower cancer and all cause mortalities in populations with a low relative proportion of this disorder Thus there seems to be no benefit of limiting dietary cholesterol intake or lowering serum cholesterol values below a certain limit Moreover evidence has been found that the health risk results from high intakes of calories aggravated by an unbalanced intake of omega6 omega3 polyunsaturated fats Based on the reviewed data new directions of lipid nutrition are recommended for the primary and secondary prevention of coronary heart disease cancer and all cause deaths which will likely revolutionize current dietary practice Secondary Prevention in Coronary Artery Disease and Myocardial Infarction P. Mathes,2012-12-06

Despite considerable effort in primary prevention coronary heart disease continues to be the leading cause of death in the industrialized nations The patient who survives his first myocardial infarction carries approximately a tenfold risk of recurrence and sudden death when compared to the normal population The concept of secondary prevention therefore has emerged as an active strategy aimed at the reduction of fatal and non fatal recurrences of myocardial infarction Apart from risk factors of relevance in primary prevention secondary prevention is dependent on the extent of the disease itself in other words the number of vessels involved the extent of myocardial damage and the degree of electrical instability Nonmedical aspects such as the level of education the degree of social support and the attitude towards stress also appear to influence the prognosis The aim of this volume is to bring together all those factors relevant to achieving the maximal life span in patients afflicted with a disease that by its very nature is a lifelong process However as the late Paul Dudley White stated appropriately more than 40 years ago it is not sufficient merely to add years to a life one should also add life to the years This concept truly is the nucleus of secondary prevention since only a life worth living generates the motivation needed to take all the steps necessary in secondary prevention The authors and the editor are most grateful to Pharma Schwarz Inc

Primary and Secondary Prevention of Coronary Heart Disease H. Hofmann,2012-12-06 In recent years major social forces such as ageing populations social trends migration patterns and the globalization of economies have reshaped social welfare policies and practices across the globe Multinational corporations NGOs and other international organizations have begun to influence social policy at a national and local level Among the many ramifications of these changes is that globalizing influences may hinder the ability of individual nation states to effect policies that are beneficial to them on a local level With contributions from thirteen countries worldwide this collected work represents the first major comparative analysis on the effect of globalization on the international welfare state The Welfare State in Post Industrial Society is divided into two major sections the first draws from a number of leading social welfare researchers from diverse countries who point to the nation state as case studies highlighting how it goes about establishing and revising social welfare provisions The second portion of the volume then moves to a more global perspective in its analysis and questioning of the impact of globalisation on citizenship ageing and marketization With its integrative analyses of policy and practice in countries struggling to provide social welfare support for their needy populations The Welfare State in Post Industrial Society will become an important voice in the debate on social welfare

Preventive Cardiology Jo Anne Micale Foody, 2007-11-03

Preventive cardiology is a fast moving field that places emphasis on the prevention and treatment of coronary disease. Preventive Cardiology: Insights Into the Prevention and Treatment of Cardiovascular Disease, Second Edition is intended for clinical cardiologists, internists, primary care providers and allied health care professionals who wish to extend their knowledge and expertise in the rapidly expanding field of preventive cardiology. It is the mission of this book to provide clinicians with the understanding and tools necessary to implement prevention in their daily practices. Recent changes in the delivery of health care in the United States and abroad in conjunction with new scientific evidence supporting the role of preventive strategies in the maintenance of cardiovascular health have focused new attention and efforts on the field of cardiovascular disease prevention. The field of cardiology is thus making a gradual transition from the technology driven intervention oriented perspective of the last several decades to a new preventive molecular based perspective. As fresh evidence amasses that preventive measures produce a considerable decrease in the incidence of both primary and secondary cardiac events and mortality there is growing widespread acknowledgment that health care providers from all arenas must initiate preventive strategies in the management and care of their patients.

Preventing Coronary Heart Disease Michael

Calnan, 2002-09-11 Coronary Heart Disease is the major cause of death in the UK, being responsible for thirty one percent of male deaths and for twenty four percent of female deaths in 1987 in England and Wales. Preventing Coronary Heart Disease examines these statistics and focuses specifically on policies for its prevention by the Government, general practitioners and concerned groups. Michael Calnan looks at the feasibility and effectiveness of these health policies and the obstacles in the way of their adoption. Drawing mainly on the discipline of politics, sociology and epidemiology, the author begins by examining the epidemiological case for prevention and then analyses what the UK Government is doing and can do. The Government's policy is based on the role of primary care in prevention and the author discusses how this can be taken on board by GPs.

concerned groups and the general public Coronary heart disease is of major concern to all those working in health and related industries as well as to individuals This book is the first study of the policies of prevention of the disease and will be invaluable reading for students of health studies and social policy as well as professionals working in health care

G. Marmot, Paul Elliott, 2005 Coronary heart disease is the leading cause of death worldwide affecting millions of people in both developed and developing countries The dual aims of this book are to review the well established and emerging risk factors in coronary heart disease and to apply this knowledge to public health approaches to disease prevention The book includes authoritative accounts of studies within a single population and international studies important areas of methodological development trials to test preventive strategies and the application of epidemiological and other knowledge to the development of public health policy for the prevention of widespread disease It is an all encompassing work containing contributions from the world authorities in the field The book is divided into four sections The introduction reviews advances in the understanding of and the current status of risk factors for CHD Section 2 looks at recent global trends and emerging patterns of CHD morbidity and mortality in several countries and includes chapters on work done under the auspices of WHO on the global burden of disease in relation to smoking and blood pressure Section 3 focuses on advances in understanding the aetiology of CHD with each chapter focused on a particular risk factor Section 4 explores measures of prevention and intervention in terms of public health policy with specific examples from around the world Preventing Cardiovascular Disease in Primary Care Clive Handler, Gerry Coghlan, 2008 Cardiovascular disease is the leading cause of death and disability in the world It is largely preventable and can certainly be delayed by attention to established risk factors Primary care is the natural and most appropriate location for cardiovascular prevention This accessible and practical reference and everyday manual covers the organisation of prevention services estimating risk and using guidelines and examines each key area with extensive use of clinical case studies It provides the information necessary to answer the concerns of patients on areas such as cholesterol diet exercise alcohol smoking and medication General Practitioners practice nurses physiotherapists dieticians and pharmacists will find this book to be an essential aid to their daily work BOOK JACKET The Role of Statins in Primary Prevention of Coronary Heart Disease in Young Patients with Metabolic Syndrome Jonathan Manto, Cornell University. Weill Cornell Graduate School of Medical Sciences, 2013 Problem Heart disease is still the number one cause of death in the Western world Statins are the first line

lipid lowering drugs for secondary preventative treatment of coronary artery disease CAD The foundation of primary prevention of CAD rests on therapeutic lifestyle changes TLCs Patients treated with statins for secondary prevention of CAD have proven better outcomes in overall mortality The role that statins play in primary prevention of CAD is still controversial Methods A PubMed search was undertaken online at the Weill Cornell Medical College Library web site searching for articles that studied statin s role in primary prevention of CAD Results An analysis of the studies revealed mixed results when using statins for primary prevention in low risk populations Several of the studies showed a reduction in overall mortality rates some were not due to CAD Several of these findings have come under criticism due to several factors such as time length of the studies and the populations that the study groups considered to qualify for primary prevention groups The studies also revealed a lack of reliable biomarkers for low risk CAD Conclusion In patients with low risk of CAD risk stratification should be undertaken for example with the Framingham Risk Calculator Careful consideration should be taken when considering starting a statin for primary prevention
