Reading In The Secondary School Classroom:

Reading in Secondary Content Areas Zhihui Fang, Mary Schleppegrell, 2008 What does it mean to teach reading in the context of the middle and high school classroom Don't students already know how to read by the time they get to secondary school And how can a busy teacher take time away from the packed curriculum of science history mathematics or language arts to teach reading This book presents a linguistic approach to teaching reading in different subjects an approach that focuses on language itself Central to this approach is a view that knowledge is constructed in and through language and that language changes with changes in knowledge As students move from elementary to secondary schools they encounter specialized knowledge and engage in new contexts of learning in all subjects This means that the language of secondary school learning is quite different from the language of the elementary years While in the elementary years the subject matter of reading materials is often close to students everyday life experiences the curriculum of secondary school deals with knowledge that is removed from students personal lives and everyday contexts The language that constructs this more specialized knowledge thus tends to be more abstract technical information laden and hierarchically organized than the more familiar and friendly language that students typically encounter during the elementary years Students need to develop specialized literacies literacy relevant to each content area as well as a critical literacy they can use across subject areas to engage with reflect on and assess specialized and advanced knowledge This functional language analysis approach is shown using actual secondary social studies science and math textbooks and using a literary text

Thinking Reading: What every secondary teacher needs to know about reading Dianne Murphy,James Murphy,2018-04-23 Despite the efforts of teachers and educators every year secondary schools across the English speaking world turn out millions of functionally illiterate leavers The costs in human misery and in wasted productivity are catastrophic What can schools do to prevent this situation In this highly accessible book James and Dianne Murphy combine more than 50 years of experience to provide teachers with a thorough easy to use introduction to the extensive research on reading and its effects on student achievement Drawing on the work of experts from around the world the authors explore how we learn to read how the many myths and misconceptions around reading developed and why they continue to persist Building on these foundations chapters go on to examine how the general secondary school classroom can support all levels of reading more effectively regardless of subject how school leaders can ensure that their systems practices and school culture deliver the very best literacy provision for all students and what it takes to ensure that a racing intervention aimed at adolescent struggling readers is truly effective The overall message of this books is one of great optimism the authors demonstrate that the right of every child to learn to read is entirely achievable if schools employ the best research driven practice

Teaching Reading in the Secondary Schools Geoff Dean, 2013-02-01 Being able to read well is one of the most important literacy requirements in our society. It is fundamental to almost all secondary school subjects and the English programme in particular. The new Key Stage 3 focus on teaching reading compels us to find exciting ways to engage young people with texts that they will continue with and develop themselves. This book outlines several approaches to reading which challenge former classroom practices. It is through these approaches that all students from reluctant boys to the most able of either gender can continue to grow as readers and develop their readiness to seek meaning in texts. This second edition adds to the original ideas in Geoff Dean's first book and includes new methods of teaching reading including guided reading and using increased grammatical student knowledge.

Building Literacy in Secondary Content Area Classrooms Thomas G. Gunning, 2012 LEARN MORE ABOUT THIS NEW BOOK AT www.pearsonhighered.com/gunning1einfo A comprehensive research based guide for developing the literacy skills students need to be college and career ready, this book incorporates the Common Core State Standards and IRA's 2010 Standards for Reading Professionals. Practicing and prospective secondary content area teachers get the knowledge and skills they need to develop their students' content literacy in this comprehensive new guide. A balanced combination of both theory and practice, it provides more than 30 sample lessons and more than a dozen examples of exemplary teaching that readers can refer to develop their own content literacy teaching skills. The book incorporates the Common Core State Standards and translates them into suggestions for assessing and teaching a wide range of secondary students and includes extensive practical suggestions for working with struggling students and English learners. Based on the premise that content area teachers have responsibility for teaching all students the reading and writing skills they need to understand and communicate the content of their courses, the book demonstrates how teachers can combine the development of content knowledge, the language and thinking skills required by the discipline and appropriate learning strategies in their teaching. The emphasis is on building language and background knowledge, the foundations of literacy. Specific suggestions for developing the academic language skills of all students but especially English language learners are provided throughout the book. With its incorporation of a variety of outstanding pedagogical techniques, this guide fosters increased understanding and retention of key concepts and gives readers the chance to become familiar with the techniques so they are prepared to use them with their students.

A Case for Teaching Literature in the Secondary School Janet Alsup, 2015-04-17 Taking a close look at the forces that affect English education in schools at the ways literature, cognitive science, the privileging of the STEM disciplines and current educational policies are connected, this timely book counters with a strong argument for the importance of continuing to teach literature in middle and secondary classrooms. The case is made through critical examination of the ongoing culture wars between the humanities and the sciences, recent research in cognitive literary studies demonstrating the power of narrative reading and an analysis of educational trends that have marginalized literature teaching in the U S including standards based and scripted curricula The book is distinctive in presenting both a synthesis of arguments for literary study in the middle and high school and sample lesson plans from practicing teachers exemplifying how literature can positively influence adolescents intellectual emotional and social selves

The Reading/writing Connection Carol Booth Olson,2003 This book features an array of individual reading writing strategies activities and mini lessons and it scaffolds these strategies in extended demonstration lessons that teachers can easily implement in their classrooms Readers will receive helpful information about teaching the writing process and responding to literature The author provides valuable examples of lessons that help students learn task specific strategies and integrates the reading and writing process in creative theoretically sound ways Practical demonstration lessons throughout the text model how to scaffold guided practice activities into coherent lesson sequences paving the way for teachers to implement theoretically sound teacher tested lessons in the classroom This book has an extensive Companion Website featuring reading and writing rubrics student models blackline masters of graphic organizers and much more The author provides student models at both the middle and high school levels in almost every chapter illustrating actual student responses to reading and writing activities The Learning Log Reflections section at the end of each chapter invites readers to take a step back and ponder what has been learned thus providing teachers the opportunities to engage in the same cognitive strategies that readers and writers use when they compose Helpful literary selections in almost every chapter gives teachers easy access to the literature featured in the activities and demonstration lessons Middle and Secondary school instructors and administrators of Reading and Writing programs
