happening throughout the world It also provides extensive and intensive activities to help students get the most of each and every story This book gives students the opportunity to explore high interest readings answer authentic and relevant questions articulate their thoughts and engage with the opinions of others This will allow students to practice reading English using a mix of lighter questions and some that are more challenging There are many reasons why I use true stories from the news with my students First the stories are of extremely high interest I always select stories with out of this world or too crazy to believe type of headlines These headlines really grab my attention and also activate their global knowledge which helps with keeping their interest and developing their prediction skills Additionally the articles are current and usually directly applicable to students lives Second most news stories are written using simple present past tenses and use simple grammar forms and sentence structures This is especially true of the headlines which usually provide a big picture overview of the entire story This is helpful as students can focus on the whole story instead of the details of each work chunk or sentence Third many articles can be found in English language newspapers printed in non English speaking countries I have found a number of great articles in my local papers printed with the specific purpose of studying English and include a translated copy of the text an English to English glossary comprehension questions vocabulary exercises etc In my experience true stories from the news work equally well with students of all ages abilities and levels of interest

News Coverage Before the Two Irish Referendums on the Lisbon Treaty Fabian Reichert, 2013-05-16 Eurobarometer shared recently that 41% of the EU citizens get their main information on European topics from daily newspapers This is also the case for those citizens who decided on the adaption of the Lisbon treaty in the two nationwide referendums in Ireland But as many media researchers showed news coverage is biased However it has to be biased for it is simply not possible to report the entire reality in one article One aspect of news bias is known under the term framing Framing leads readers to think in a certain direction for journalists underline certain aspects in a news story and usually cover a story only from one angle Therefore the journalist s angle can have a high influence on the reader s opinion The study follows these hints and examines the news coverage before the two Irish referendums on the Lisbon treaty took place Applying a content and framing analysis of the two most selling Irish newspapers namely the Irish Times and the Irish Independent it aims to make statements about the framing of the treaty in the news and gives evidence to the informative value of the title U.S. Army Recruiting News United States.
