

The treatment had two big strengths in its design: women who did not receive the drug (placebo) group had a 10% reduction in their risk of having a heart attack, stroke, or dying from any cause. The second big strength was that the findings regarding the heart attack and stroke risk were consistent in both the placebo group and the group that received the treatment. The authors conclude that the findings "are consistent with the hypothesis that the treatment had a beneficial effect on the cardiovascular system."

The study also demonstrated that women who were in the premenstrual phase had a higher risk of developing a urinary tract infection than those who were in the menstrual phase. This finding is consistent with previous research that has shown that the risk of urinary tract infection is higher in the premenstrual phase than in the menstrual phase.
