

Of Time and the River

A Legend of Man's Hunger in His Youth

by Thomas Wolfe

author of
LOOK HOMeward, ANGEL

In this novel Thomas Wolfe recalls the youth of Samson Lewis in the North Piedmont mountains north of Asheville, North Carolina. Lewis said that "he may have a chance to be the greatest American writer . . . in fact I don't see why he should not be one of the greatest world writers." And Thomas Wolfe's new novel, like "Look Homeward, Angel" is, he writes Samson Lewis again, "in days and spaces that I share with the whole of life."

It is an epic of the quest and pilgrimage of youth, specifically of an American, but essentially of the young man in all lands and ages. This pilgrimage begins in Asheville, the heart of the mountains, and takes him through a great variety of adventures in Europe, the East, and New York, through the cities of London and finally to Paris and the mountains of France, from which he returns to America, inevitably drawn back to the great, repeating continent he had had in his memory and dream.

For those who follow, the dramatic of prose and background, variety of thought, and the richness of the characters, the theme, great youth living and passionately moving through the world, with the sense of the past and the future, and the great, repeating continent he had had in his memory and dream.
