Interactive Technologies (Firm),2000 Roads to Reference Mario Gómez-Torrente,2019-11-28 How is it that words come to stand for the things they stand for Is the thing that a word stands for its reference fully identified or described by conventions known to the users of the word Or is there a more roundabout relation between the reference of a word and the conventions that determine or fix it Do words like water three and red refer to appropriate things just as the word Aristotle refers to Aristotle If so which things are these and how do they come to be referred to by those words In Roads to Reference Mario Gomez Torrente provides novel answers to these and other questions that have been of traditional interest in the theory of reference The book introduces a number of cases of apparent indeterminacy of reference for proper names demonstratives and natural kind terms which suggest that reference fixing conventions for them adopt the form of lists of merely sufficient conditions for reference and reference failure He then provides arguments for a new anti descriptivist picture of those kinds of words according to which the reference fixing conventions for them do not describe their reference This book also defends realist and objectivist accounts of the reference of ordinary natural kind nouns numerals and adjectives for sensible qualities According to these accounts these words refer respectively to ordinary kinds cardinality properties and properties of membership in intervals of sensible dimensions and these things are fixed in subtle ways by associated reference fixing conventions
