

- Or use a spatula or a bowl scraper.
- To prevent vise jaws from leaving clamp marks, pad them with plastic coffee-can lids.
- Or use a kitchen sponge or carpet scraps.
- For pliers, cut two fingers off an old pair of rubber gloves and slip them over the jaws.

Storing small parts

- Separate nails, screws, bolts, and other small items and put them into baby-food jars with screw-on tops. Then punch a hole in the center of each lid, screw it in place under a work shelf, and screw the jar to the lid.
- Keep nuts and washers together by slipping them over the open end of an extra-large safety pin. Close the pin and hang it on a nail.

Storing larger tools

- Hang a shoe bag with pockets above your workbench.
- Store your circular saw blades in record-album covers and line them up in a record rack. Label the covers clearly and keep rack where children can't get at it.

Storing tools often used

- The tools used most frequently should be stored in an old lunch box. The box is ready at hand in case of an emergency.

Storing tools seldom used

- Before storing seldom-used tools, spray them with silicone lubricant, then wrap each tool tightly in aluminum foil.

"Safety" apron

- Make a quick apron for those messy jobs by cutting holes in your arms and head in a large garbage bag.

Gluing clamps

- Use a spring-type clothespin to hold a glued object in place as it dries.
- Or use a clamp-type pants hanger.
- And for a very small item, try an old screw-type earring.

Gluing joints

- When gluing a joint, put a strip of tape along the edge. If any of the glue is forced out of the joint, it will stick to the tape. When the job is done, just peel the tape off and any excess glue will come off with it.
- For a stronger bond mix a few steel-wool shavings in the glue before applying.

No tape measure?

- Use string to take measurements in awkward places or around corners. Fasten one end with tape.
- Spread your fingers wide apart and measure the distance between your little finger and your thumb. When you don't have a ruler, this "quick reference" can serve to approximate a measurement.
- If you're alone and have to measure something long with a tape measure, tape one end down with masking tape.

Keep this hint on file

- Clean a file by putting a piece of masking tape over the length of the blade and press down firmly. Pull the tape off and the shavings will come off with it.
