

A MASQUE OF REASON

by
ROBERT FROST

THIS NEW POEM by Robert Frost, published on the occasion of his seventieth birthday, is a literary event of major importance. The extent of its departure from the poet's earlier work will startle many readers; they will find a challenging freshness of thought and theme but no loss of the intensity of feeling or the technical skill they have rightly come to expect from America's foremost poet.

In A MASQUE OF REASON, Frost, who has never been impressed by superficial orthodoxies, is witty and charitable, mocking and affectionate, as many-faceted and sharp-edged as a diamond. He is at the same time detached and benevolent, ironic and warm-hearted—an attitude toward mankind that springs from his inexhaustible faith in the mind and spirit of the individual. So deep and unshakable is this faith, so much the core of all Mr. Frost's poetry, that he can write of it playfully as well as profoundly. In this perhaps the author agrees with Job's wife who says to Job and God and Satan:

"Now if you three have settled anything You'd as well smile as frown on the occasion."
