Perloff, This collection of original state of the art research on the cognitive psychology of political communication addresses the central question of how individuals process political information. Using a model developed by the editors, political information processing is examined in several stages: 1 voters ability to process political information, 2 voters motivation to process such information, 3 the effects of political messages, and 4 the impact of these processes and effects on the polity. The contributors' approaches to the investigation of information processing represent a broad spectrum of methodologies and disciplinary perspectives ranging from the macrosociological to microcognitive to affective. All reflect the central beliefs that voters play an active role in the construction of political reality and that cognitive processes do help explain why communication has certain types of effects and why they minimize media influence.

Television and Political Advertising Frank Biocca, 2013-12-16 This volume represents one of the first major scholarly effort to unravel the psychological and symbolic processing of political advertising. Utilizing survey, experimental, qualitative, and semiotic methodologies to study this phenomenon, the contributors to Television and Political Advertising trace how political ads help to interpret the psychological reality of the presidential campaign in the minds of millions of voters. A product of the National Political Advertising Research Project, this interdisciplinary effort is valuable to researchers in advertising, communication, and consumer psychology since it helps define future work on the relationship between television politics and the mind of the voter. This volume, Television and Political Advertising: Psychological Processes, is the first of two and covers such topics as Models and Theories for Viewing Political Television, Psychological Processing of Issues, Images, and Form, Differential Processing of Positive and Negative Advertising, and The Psychological Contexts of Processing.

Moreover, electoral persuasion encompasses not only what happens in an election but also what happens before and after involving candidates, parties, interest groups, the media and the voters themselves. This volume surveys the vast political science literature on this subject, emphasizing contemporary research and topics and encouraging cross-fertilization among research strands. A global roster of authors provides a broad examination of electoral persuasion with international perspectives complementing deep coverage of U.S. politics. Major areas of coverage include general models of political persuasion, persuasion by parties, candidates and outside groups, media influence, interpersonal influence, electoral persuasion across contexts and empirical methodologies for understanding electoral persuasion
