Mantle Plumes Joachim R. R. Ritter, U.R. Christensen, 2007-04-27 The concept of mantle plumes originally suggested by Morgan 1971 is widely but not unequivocally accepted as the cause for hotspot volcanism Plumes are thought of as deep rooted approximately cylindrical regions of hot rising mantle rock with a typical diameter of 100 200 km Pressure release melting near the bottom of the lithosphere produces magmas that rise to the surface and lead when the plate moves relative to the plume to a chain of volcanic edifices whose age progresses with increasing distance from the plume For a long time the evidence for mantle plumes has been largely circumstantial Laboratory and computer models of mantle convection show that under certain conditions plume like structures can be found and these simulations have been used to characterise their properties Geodetic signals such as topographic swells and associated geoid anomalies which surround the volcanic hotspots support the plume hypothesis They are best identified in an oceanic environment where the plume signal is usually less susceptible to be masked by effects of crustal or lithospheric heterogeneities The isotopic and trace element composition of hotspot lavas differs from those of mid oceanic ridge basalts which is interpreted as indication for a source reservoir different from average upper mantle rock The idea of mantle plumes has gained widespread popularity in various disciplines of Earth science and has been used sometimes perhaps excessively to explain volcanic and other phenomena
