Rollo on the Rhine Jacob Abbott, 1863

Rollo on the Rhine Jacob Abbott, 2013-08-20 If a man were to be raised in a balloon high enough above the continent of Europe to survey the whole of it at one view he would see the land gradually rising from the borders of the sea on every side towards a portion near the centre where he would behold a vast region of mountainous country with torrents of water running down the slopes and through the valleys of it while the summits were tipped with perpetual snow The central part of this mass of mountains forms what is called Switzerland the eastern part is the Tyrol and the western Savoy But though the men who live on these mountains have thus made three countries out of them the whole region is in nature one It constitutes one mighty mass of mountainous land which is lifted up so high into the air that all the summits rise into the regions of intense and perpetual cold and so condense continually from the atmosphere inexhaustible quantities of rain and snow

Rollo on the Rhine (Classic Reprint) Jacob Abbott, 2015-07-16 Excerpt from Rollo on the Rhine The water which falls upon this mountainous region must of course find its way to the sea In doing so the thousands of smaller torrents unite with each other into larger and larger streams until at length they make four mighty rivers the largest and most celebrated in Europe All the streams of the southern slopes of the mountains form one great river which flows cast into the Adriatic This river is the Po On the western side the thousands of mountain torrents combine and form the Rhone which making a great bend turns to the southward and flows into the Mediterranean On the eastern side the water can find no escape till it has traversed the whole continent to the eastward and reached the Black Sea This stream is the Danube And finally on the north the immense number of cascades and torrents which come out from the glaciers or pour down the ravines or meander through the valleys or issue from the lakes of the northern slope of the mountains combine at Basle and flow north across the whole continent nearly six hundred miles to the North Sea This river is the Rhine All this which I have thus been explaining may be seen very clearly if you turn to any map of Europe and find the mountainous region in the centre and then trace the courses of the four great rivers as I have described them About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works
