

Research Study: The Tangled Web: Critical Software and Critical Infrastructure Law

We are conducting a research study about how the development and deployment of critical software should be regulated as part of the regulation of the cyber resilience of critical infrastructure assets.

We are seeking research participants from the following groups: critical infrastructure asset operators; critical software vendors; officials from national cyber security agencies and regulatory agencies; critical infrastructure policy officials; cyber diplomats; and academic and think tank stakeholders.

These groups for recruitment of participants were chosen because our study concerns how critical software fits into critical infrastructure regulation; and research participants from these groups would have had experience and/or expertise of high relevance to the topic of the study.

If you decide to take part in this study, you will be asked to provide your views on certain areas of these subjects.

You will be interviewed virtually over Microsoft Teams. It is estimated that the interview will take (depending on the group you are selected from) up to 60 minutes.

The video and audio for the interviews will be recorded for transcription purposes, in addition to a member of the research team making detailed notes during the interviews.

You will receive the opportunity to review the transcripts from the interviews in which you participate, both to ensure the accuracy of the transcripts and that the transcripts do not contain any commercially- or (national) security-sensitive information.

Depending on which group you are selected from, you will encounter open-ended questions to elicit your views on how: critical infrastructure cyber resilience (including regulation of software supply chain risk management by critical infrastructure asset operators) should be regulated; critical software development and distribution should be regulated; national security risk from software supply chain risks facing critical infrastructure assets should be tackled; and governments should practise cyber diplomacy to help mitigate the latter risks.

Please contact Ravi Nayyar, PhD Scholar, University of Sydney Business School, ravi.nayyar@sydney.edu.au, if you would like to participate in this study.

This study has been approved by the Human Research Ethics Committee (HREC) of The University of Sydney (HREC Approval No. 2023/463).
