Official Gazette of the United States Patent Office United States. Patent Office, 1908 Trails of Africa Daniel Nuss, 2022-11-15 After relocating into the heart of northern Tanzania for their careers four close friends participate in never ending suspenseful trapdoor assignments otherwise known in their line of work as wildlife conservation and archaeology But it's not until one of the group's friends presented challenges like no other to their lives during the highly unimaginable determined work they happened to love How would each character react to their fellow coworkers if they locked horns with someone in their seemingly close knit group who never stopped being impossible It would seem that no matter what the group had done they never seemed to get it right for that particular person And the fact of the matter is it's a recurring matter throughout nearly each day spent between one another while enjoying their work interest What everybody in the group save that special someone must ask themselves is How long should they put up with that special someone and deal with the difficulty To make matters worse one of the other characters refuses to hear the difficult character out which leaves a stain on their relationships Complications only arise as a criminal led the charge in parts of Tanzania to involve them in tracking him and his men in poaching and archaeology And to top it all off the difficult character had the canny ability to be a step forward through the door and to take the lead with any obstacle that heads their way But by leaving each of the close acquaintances far more tightly knit together than they were before in the middle of prevalent danger their struggles came as a surprise realizing how they really didn't see each other the right way all based on a story of suspenseful adventure that only raised the tenacity of keeping the group alarmed on their toes
