

A topographic map of Vermont is shown, with the state's outline clearly defined. The map uses a color gradient to represent elevation, with darker greens for lower elevations and lighter yellows and browns for higher elevations. The word "VERMONT" is superimposed in the center of the map in a large, bold, white sans-serif font. Each letter of the word has a thick, dark red outline, making it stand out prominently against the map's background. The map also shows major water bodies like Lake Champlain to the west and the Atlantic Ocean to the east, as well as various rivers and smaller lakes within the state's borders.
