

The Treaty of Lisbon: Reforming the European Union

✓ Exclusively available on IvyPanda

The Treaty of Lisbon is an agreement that brings various European countries together in order to enhance democracy, efficiency, and transparency in Europe; it also aims at forming knowledge-based economies that promote sustainable development and social cohesion under the guidance of two key organs – European Union and European Community. Generally, the mandate of the treaty includes reforming the structure of the European Union and its mode of operations within member countries. The history of the reform process can be traced back to the time when the European constitution was drawn to replace earlier treaties signed in Rome in 2004. Before being accepted, members were expected to ratify it. Following the collapse of the European constitution, it was shelved and the Treaty of Lisbon was enacted to replace it in 2007. However, the treaty became effective in 2009 on ratification by all members based on the constitutional requirement.

Generally, the Treaty of Lisbon seeks to achieve various objectives, including enhancing democracy and transparency in Europe thorough the European parliament; this would not only strengthen the voice of citizens, but also increase participation of national parliaments in facilitating reforms. Additionally, the Treaty intends to enhance efficiency among member countries of European Union, especially in relation to decision and policymaking, institutional frameworks, and living standards of citizens. The next objective of the Treaty is to promote and reinforce human rights and values, preserve fundamental freedom of all citizens and enhance solidarity among European countries. Finally, the Treaty works as a framework for international relations with the global community.

The Treaty of Lisbon is necessary in order to set precedence to modernization and create room for reforms amongst the 27 European Union members who operate under rules governing 15 of its members. The process that runs back to history has sought to find the right platform to use the avenues under its authority as well as empower action. The need has been prompted by challenges facing all nations such as climate change, terror, insecurity, threat to energy and other global concerns.
