

A review of foreign business management in China

Jing Yu Yang · Frank Ben Tipton · Jiatao Li

© Springer Science+Business Media, LLC 2010

Abstract This study reviews the research on foreign business management in China and analyzes 193 articles published in English in 13 academic journals between 1980 and 2008. The studies were classified based on the type of research, the main topic, and the methods employed. The studies were then mapped and their key research findings and conclusions were highlighted. A three-stage model of market transition was developed to contextualize the work, and this helps explain the shifting focuses in the literature and identify directions for future research.

Increasing global economic integration has turned China into a leading destination for foreign direct investment (FDI) (World Investment Report, 2005). Since China opened up for foreign investment in the late 1970s, foreign business has played an important role in transmitting capital, knowledge, and management systems into China (Luo, 1999b; Shenkar & Li, 1999), and it has emerged as one of the key drivers behind China's rapid economic growth. (Buckley, Clegg, & Wang, 2002; 2007a; Wei & Liu, 2006). Being a transition economy, China presents difficult challenges for foreign investors. Foreign investors entering and operating in China
